GUEST LECTURE ON HEDGING IN INDIAN MARKET

It is very essential to have a continuous learning habit at all the situation and keep updated always. The reason behind the same is, though the process of learning has changed but learning should not be stopped as the world outside is moving at a fast pace and it is very essential to be on track. The Institute on 12th of August 2020 arranged a webinar on the concept of Hedging. The speaker for the day was Mr. Rahul Singh who is a co-founder of Tycho Investments. The word derivative is very complex and to invest in a derivative contract is more complex and if there is a miscalculation then the investor might end up losing their complete investments, this is the reason why hedging was being discussed and explained to the students and how should they determine and ascertain which position should they opt when they are entering into any derivative contract i.e. taking an opposite position in the spot or future market. The students were asked to understand the theoretical concepts very well that will enable them to create a better pathway in the field of securities trading and investing. The speaker also advised the students to take up certification courses like NISM that will help getting into a trading firm and will have a hedge to get into trading practices. The speaker rightly stated that trading in derivative is not a easy task and to learn it there shall be small goals or targets that must be kept and achieved on timely basis so that the learners are cautious when trading in derivative and are protected from any default. The speaker also encouraged the students to be a part of stock exchange or stock market so as to get updated with what is happening at present in the economy and thereby learning how stock market works.

Overall, the guest lecture was received well by all the participants who reverted with a positive feedback post the session.
